What happens after you receive the keys.

Buying the property is not the end of the journey. My commitment is to stay by your side, supporting you so your investment is managed as well as it can be — from the handover of the keys to the ongoing management of your asset in the United States.

Closing is complete, but there are still important steps to protect and manage what you have just acquired.

The pages that follow lay out those steps in the order they usually happen, from the first days through the ongoing routine of owning the property.

IN THIS GUIDE

I Immediate protection 01 — 03

II Preparing the property 04 — 07

III The next chapter 08

SECTION I · 01 — 03

Immediate protection

01 Change the locks or reset the access codes

The first thing to handle after the keys change hands. It applies to gates, the garage and electronic keypads as well.

02 Securing insurance

If it has not been arranged yet, make sure the property is properly insured according to its use: primary residence, investment or seasonal.

IF THE PURCHASE IS FINANCED

- Homeowners insurance is mandatory before or on the day of closing.
- The lender requires proof of the policy to release the loan funds.

IF THE PURCHASE IS ALL CASH

- There is no legal deadline to secure insurance.
- The recommendation is for coverage to begin on closing day itself, so the property is protected from the moment title transfers.

IMPORTANT

Arrange it before hurricane season begins. During that window premiums rise and some carriers stop accepting new policyholders.

03 Transferring the utility accounts

Arrange the transfer or activation of:

- Electricity
- Water and sewer
- Gas, where applicable
- Internet and TV

For single-family homes, the buyer contacts the utility providers to request the transfer or opening of accounts effective from the closing date.

In condominiums, some services such as water or gas may already be included in the HOA fee. Electricity and internet are usually arranged by the owner.

If the property is intended for rental, set these accounts up before the first tenant or guest arrives.

SECTION II · 04 — 07

Preparing the property

04 Registering with the association

If the property is in a condominium, register as the new owner and get familiar with the access rules, common-area reservations and use of the unit.

05 Furnishing and decor

If the property is new or intended for rental, this is the stage to:

- Furnish the property
- Decorate
- Buy appliances and kitchenware
- Prepare it for living or for receiving guests

06 Property management

If you do not live in the United States, consider hiring a company to assist with management, maintenance and, where applicable, renting the property.

07 Tax planning

Depending on how the purchase was structured, it may be worth speaking with an accountant or tax advisor to understand your obligations in the United States and in your home country.

SECTION III · 08

The next chapter

08 Enjoy your investment

Now it is time to put your plan into practice:

- Live in Florida
- Enjoy the property during vacations
- Place it in short or long-term rental, where permitted
- Track the appreciation of your asset

Support does not end at closing.

Every step in this guide has details that shift depending on the type of property, the area, and the purpose of the purchase — primary home, investment or seasonal use.

If you'd like to review this roadmap applied to your case, or need referrals for insurance carriers, accountants and property management companies, let's talk.
